

New Markets Tax Credits Fact Sheet

General

- The New Markets Tax Credits (NMTC) program is a federal program that is managed by the Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFI) Fund, a subsidiary of the U.S. Department of the Treasury.
- The NMTC program was developed by Congress on December 21, 2000, as part of the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000. The NMTC program was designed in order to assist private development in areas with high poverty rates and/or low median incomes.
- A New Market Tax Credit creates a 39% tax credit for qualified investors that invest equity in Community Development Entities (CDEs). The tax credit is claimed over a seven-year period that begins when the investment is made. Investors claim tax credits that equal 5% of the total investment for three years, and claim tax credits that equal 6% of the total investment for four years after that, to sum 39% of the total investment.
- Community Development Entities (CDEs) are private organizations that collect capital from investors to invest in qualifying projects in low-income communities. CDEs are responsible for the dispersal of NMTCs to investors that invest directly to CDEs.

The Process

- An organization that wants to become CDE submits an application to the CDFI Fund.
- If approved, the CDE submits an NMTC Allocation Application to the CDFI Fund. The Allocation Application details specifically how the CDE will invest in low-income communities.
- If the Allocation Application is accepted, the CDE receives the authority to raise a certain amount of capital for the projects within low-income communities. The capital is raised by attracting investors, who will receive the 39% tax credit through the aforementioned process.
- The capital that CDEs collect is used to fund qualifying projects only, which will be located in low-income communities. This capital is called a Qualified Equity Investment (QEI).
- The CDE then uses the QEI to supply capital, debt-, or equity-funding for qualifying businesses and developments in communities with high poverty rates and/or low median incomes. These investments are known as QUALified Low-Income Community Investments (QUALICIs).
